

DON'T WRECK

10 Steps to Protect Yourself After a Car Crash

A free publication by the Law Offices of James Scott Farrin

The goal of this booklet is simple.

People just like you are in car wrecks every day. And most people don't really know what do when it happens. We want to help you know what to do – and want not to do – in order to protect yourself and your legal rights. Here is a simple list to get started:

10 THINGS YOU SHOULD DO IN THE EVENT OF A CAR WRECK

Contact the authorities

Many times, people make the mistake of assuming the other driver will be honest. Unfortunately, integrity for some people ends at their pocketbook. It may be hard to believe, but that nice person at the crash scene who apologized to you may later tell his or her insurance that they did nothing wrong and the crash was really your fault! Without a supporting police investigation, your claim may be lost even before it gets started. Make sure you always contact the police and have them fill out a report on the crash.

Exchange information

Regardless of the officer's investigation, make sure you get all the contact information for the other driver and his or her insurance carrier. Also, get:

- A. Their tag number,
- B. The make and model (and color) of their car,
- C. Policy number,
- D. Phone number, and
- E. Address.

If they won't give you everything on this list, get as much of it as you can.

Take pictures at the scene

They say a picture is worth a thousand words. Sometimes, it can also be worth a few thousand dollars! Most people have cell phones that have built-in cameras. Use that camera after a crash to document:

- A. The position of the vehicles,
- B. The damage to your vehicle,
- C. The damage to the other vehicle,
- D. The appearance of the other driver (just take a picture of them), and
- E. The other driver's license and other pertinent information (like the registration and tags).

Get witness information

If anyone saw the crash, make sure you get their name, phone number, and address. You may need it later. An independent witness on your side can make a huge difference in your case.

Make sure the police officer has their contact information, too.

Review the facts

How well do you remember the road conditions? Was the road busy? What was the speed limit? What other details about the wreck do you remember? Articulate these clearly to the officer and then write down your own notes, too.

No one's memory is perfect, especially with all the adrenaline after a crash, so document everything carefully.

Get timely medical attention

If the injury is serious enough, you may not have the opportunity to do some of the things listed above. That's ok. Your first priority should always be your health. Whether you go to an emergency room by EMS from the crash site or seek attention elsewhere, like an urgent care or primary care physician office, make sure you get checked out thoroughly as soon as practical. Don't wait too long to see a doctor. Insurance companies love to argue about "gaps in treatment," so see a doctor within a day or two of the crash if you are having ANY problems. The old adage of "better safe than sorry" certainly rings true in this situation.

SPECIAL NOTE ABOUT MEDICAL TREATMENT

If you have health insurance, you should use it. The at-fault insurance company will NOT pay your bills as you go, and the medical offices will seek payment from you if you don't file health insurance. There are many issues involved here. We'll be glad to explain them if we speak with you.

Notify insurance companies

Even when you are not at fault, you should notify your own insurance company as well as the at-fault insurance company. Typically, this should be done within a day or two after the crash. Do not wait for the insurance company to call you. You may have coverages, such as MedPay or UM/ UIM, on your own policy that could benefit you without directly affecting your rates. Also, if there is damage to your vehicle, you'll want to go ahead and file a property damage claim with the at-fault insurance company or your own carrier. But do NOT give a recorded statement to the at-fault insurance company. These statements are often just fishing trips for an adjuster to find a way to minimize or deny your claim. And do not go into detail about your injuries with the at-fault insurance company; simply inform them you are injured and will seek appropriate medical care. Of course, do not sign any sort of release after a crash, either, without having it reviewed by an experienced attorney; you may be signing away your entire case!

Follow through with appropriate medical care

After your initial visit, it is important to keep up with scheduled medical visits. It is a very bad idea to wait months – or even just weeks – before getting follow-up attention if you are injured.

As mentioned earlier, insurance companies like to argue about “gaps in treatment.” Don't give them ammunition to use against you.

Avoid social media

Many people don't realize that posting about a wreck or injuries on social media (like Facebook, Twitter, or Instagram) may be used against them later. Avoid making any comment about the crash or your injuries on social media. This has become a huge issue in many cases.

...and one last thing...

Speak with an experienced attorney

This booklet has touched on just a few of the issues you should be aware of at the start of your case, but there are many nuanced issues throughout the life of your case, too. Rest assured, the insurance company has attorneys and adjusters working to save money for the company by possibly paying you less than you may deserve. The best way to balance the scales of justice in your favor is to speak with an experienced attorney as soon as possible. An experienced attorney can explain your rights and help you decide if representation is the right course for your specific case.
